Keeping Hands and Feet to Myself

A Social Story About Personal Space.
At my school, there are lots of rules. One rule is that I keep my hands and feet to myself.

It is important to keep hands and feet to myself so that I don’t bother other people.
My friends, family and teachers do not like it when I touch them with my hands without asking. It makes them angry.

My friends, family and teachers also do not like it when I kick them with my feet. It may hurt them or make them angry. They may not want to be around me anymore.
I need to remember to keep hands and feet to myself in lots of different places:

While sitting at my desk at school.

While riding on the school bus.
While playing on the playground.

While standing in line.

Some other places where I should keep my hands and feet to myself are:
